

The Brand Consistency Check

Does your business look, sound and feel like the same brand wherever customers find it?

Use this check across your main customer touchpoints. Score what is actually there today, not what is written in your brand guidelines.

Includes: touchpoint audit + consistency score + worked example + fix-first worksheet

This is not a design competition. The aim is to find the places where the brand changes enough to confuse, weaken trust or make the business harder to recognise.

What does brand consistency mean?

A consistent brand gives people the same basic signals wherever they meet you. The logo does not need to sit in the same place every time, and every sentence does not need to sound identical. But the business should still feel recognisable.

Check these five areas

Area	What you are checking
Visual identity	Logo, colours, type, imagery and overall visual style.
Voice	The words, tone and level of formality used with customers.
Message	Whether the business explains what it does and why it matters in a consistent way.
Offer	Whether products, services, prices and promises match across channels.
Experience	Whether the way customers are treated matches what the brand says about itself.

Consistency does not mean sameness. An advert can be louder than an invoice. A social post can be warmer than a policy page. The question is whether they still clearly belong to the same business.

Part 1: Check your touchpoints

Choose the touchpoints your customers actually use. Score each from 0 to 3.

0 = does not match 1 = weak match 2 = mostly consistent 3 = clearly consistent

Touchpoint	Visual	Voice	Message	Offer	Experience
Website	—	—	—	—	—
Instagram / social	—	—	—	—	—
Paid ads	—	—	—	—	—
Sales material	—	—	—	—	—
Email / messages	—	—	—	—	—
Shop / office / location	—	—	—	—	—
Packaging / delivery	—	—	—	—	—
Customer support	—	—	—	—	—

Ignore any row that does not apply to your business. Add another touchpoint if an important customer interaction is missing.

Part 2: Find the inconsistency

Totals can help you spot a pattern, but the useful part is finding where the brand breaks.

Area	Your total	What a low score can point to
Visual identity	_____	Different logos, colours, imagery or design rules being used.
Voice	_____	The business sounds like different companies across different channels.
Message	_____	Customers receive different explanations of what you do or why to choose you.
Offer	_____	Prices, packages, promises or service details do not line up.
Experience	_____	The customer experience does not match the expectation created by the brand.

Look for the gap that matters

A low score on a rarely used document may matter less than a small inconsistency on your highest-traffic sales page. Do not fix things simply because they scored lowest. Consider how many customers see the problem and how much it affects their decision.

Circle the three inconsistencies customers are most likely to notice. Those become your shortlist for the next step.

Worked example

A service business believes its brand is consistent because the same logo and colours appear everywhere. The audit shows a different problem.

Touchpoint	What customers see	Issue
Website	Clear, professional and direct language.	Strong
Social	Very casual language and offers not shown on the website.	Voice + offer
Sales deck	Old service names and an older positioning line.	Message + offer
Email	Clear and helpful, but visually unrelated to the website.	Visual
Customer support	Fast and personal, matching the brand promise.	Strong

What they learn

A visual redesign is not the first priority. The bigger problem is that customers are seeing different services and different language depending on where they look.

Their first fixes are to update the sales deck, align the offer across the website and social channels, and create a short voice guide for anyone writing customer-facing content.

The audit changes the question from “Does our branding look good?” to “Where are customers receiving conflicting signals?”.

Part 3: Fix first

Do not redesign everything because you found one weak touchpoint. Prioritise the inconsistencies that customers see often and that can affect trust, understanding or a buying decision.

Issue	How many customers see it?	How much does it matter?	Priority
_____	Low / Med / High	Low / Med / High	_____
_____	Low / Med / High	Low / Med / High	_____
_____	Low / Med / High	Low / Med / High	_____
_____	Low / Med / High	Low / Med / High	_____

Your first three fixes

1. _____
2. _____
3. _____

Who owns the changes? _____

When will you check again? _____

One final check: if you removed the logo, would a customer still recognise the business from the words, imagery, message and experience?

Make the brand easier to recognise, not harder to manage.
